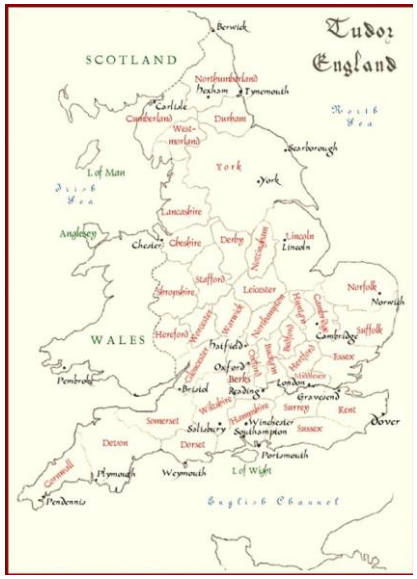
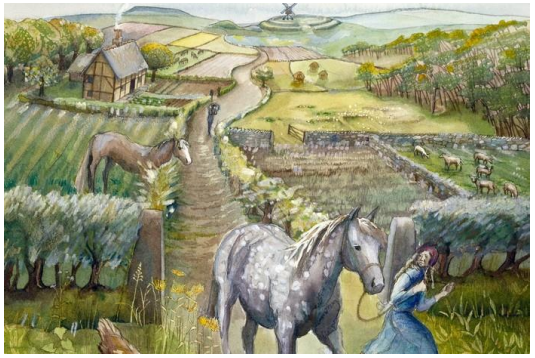
This is what England looked like back in Tudor times.

What looks similar to today?

What has changed?



Can you use the physical map to help you work out why settlements were built in those places?



Many people in Tudor times lived and worked on small farms called smallholdings. Much of the land in England was used for growing crops and keeping animals.

Does anything on this painting look the same as you would find on modern farms?

What has changed over time?

During the Tudor period Lincolnshire was one of the most isolated counties in England. Henry VIII famously referred to its inhabitants as "the commons of one shire and that one of the most brute and beastly of the whole realm".

Do you think Henry VIII's description was fair?

How has Lincolnshire changed since Tudor times?
